independency and sustainability. Prof. Paramita Saha, Director, Women's Studies Centre, Tripura University, then gave her short address to the august gathering.

Dr. Deepak Sharma, Registrar, Tripura University in his address highlighted an aspect of "Gender Equality", with reference to the Vietnam War and the life of the wives of the American soldiers fighting the war at Vietnam for America in the 1950s and 60s. He has also briefly talked about the emergence of the sense of "Gender Equity" with the emergence, establishment and solidification of the women organizations all across the world in the 20th century AD. Lastly, with the 'Vote of Thanks' of Dr. Subhash Debnath, Assistant Professor, the Inaugural Session has formally come to an end.

Technical Session – I:

The speaker of the first (1st) Technical Session was Dr. K Gireesan, Director, MIT School of Government (MIT-SOG), MIT World Peace University and the topic of his lecture was 'Gender and Sustainable Development: Role of Women Leaders at the local level'. His points of discussion were mostly based on interaction with leaders and experiences gathered through travelling across the world in diverse field of life and work. He separated his discussion and explained it into two parts: (i) presenting a micro level prospective - the general aspect of gender and with crust on economic, human and immune mental aspect and (ii) how the leadership of local level especially women leaders quite comprehensively contributed towards gender and sustainable development. At the local level, Dr. K Gireesan, explained that sustainable development can only be achieved through long term investment in economic, social and environmental capital. Though women account for over 1/2 of the potential talent, based on their economic, social and enormous contribution largely go unrealized, unrecognized and undervalued. Economic growth and social wellbeing should be enhanced and sustainable development should be ensured for women. Sustainable economic growth depends on women joining to labor forces and optimum utilization of their knowledge and skills, but this are unfortunately largely underrated. In India, the role of women in the labor sector in the form of participation is significantly lower than the women in many countries. This happens due to the persistent gender wage gap. He said Mahatma Gandhi National Employment Guarantee act 2005 was the first scheme in India that provided equal wages to men and women.

Dr. K. Gireesan highlighted women have lower-level jobs or work in female specific/dominated fields such as education and healthcare, which are mostly underpaid compare to many other areas, as well as work at home is also an undervalued. He continued by saying that, to evolve gender friendly practices, there is a need to improve access to the childcare facilities and workplace. Only by giving general friendly practices we can bring positive change in this gender wage cap and government could legislative flexible work approach. According to Dr. K. Gireesan, it is very important that the State/government should adopt a gender perspective towards man and women, considering the different social and cultural factor applied to both. He also highlighted the role of women in political arena and also considered the environmental factor that can also affect women. He opines that, climatic change has a profound impact on women because of their unique social and economic status. In political leadership he put forward the agenda of education, public health, hygiene & sanitation, agriculture, energy and infrastructure, contributing significantly in the social upliftment of the women.
